MESSAGE FROM THE CHAIR

Thanks to an investment by the Canadian government, the Canadian Institute for Research on Linguistic Minorities (CIRLM) was created in 2002 to meet a need for research on official language minorities in Canada. The young Institute is proud to present its third annual report. Its dynamic accomplishments bode well for the future of research on linguistic minorities in Canada. The CIRLM fills the need for academic research, as well as for applied research that has a direct impact on the communities and stakeholders concerned about the fate of official language minorities. With its partnership based approach to research, the Institute plays an essential upstream role in research by encouraging ties between researchers and communicating information on research opportunities. Furthermore, the CIRLM's participation on various committees that set the agendas for research gives it a significant role in planning research on minorities. Its involvements in planning Statistics Canada postcensal inquiry and in planning research on Anglophones in Québec are examples of the CIRLM's efforts. The Institute is becoming an essential clearinghouse for researchers on minorities. Its work in organizing activities to disseminate knowledge in both academic and community milieus gives it an important role in the transfer of knowledge about minorities. The Institute contributes to our scientific knowledge not only of the situation in which official language minorities live in Canada, but also of the action of stakeholders concerned about these communities.

I must praise the quality of the work done by Rodrigue Landry, director of the Institute, and his team, who have created the conditions and put together the resources needed to fulfill the CIRLM's mission. I also want to thank the members of the Board of Directors for their availability and for the quality of their participation in Board meetings.

I invite you to read about the CIRLM's accomplishments and to judge them for yourself.

MESSAGE FROM THE DIRECTOR

After putting together a team that makes up the nucleus of our research, dissemination and networking activities, and thanks to its approach to research based on numerous partnerships, the Institute is becoming a central link of the web of research on official language minorities in Canada. The Institute is working at all levels to advance research on official language minorities. The Institute creates conditions to increase research activities, disseminates information to create research opportunities, creates the partnerships essential to carrying out research, is gradually increasing its number of associate researchers, does fundamental and applied research and disseminates the knowledge stemming from its work in academic and community milieus. This presentation of its accomplishments will show you the extent of the CIRLM's activities in five areas of research: 1) identity, 2) early childhood, youth and the family, 3) community vitality, 4) health and 5) governance. Less tangibly, the Institute also plays an essential role by participating in numerous consultations in order to better position research on official language minorities within the various planning exercises of those responsible for the development of research.

In the light of these accomplishments and these constant efforts to make stakeholders aware of the question of minorities, the CIRLM is optimistic about the future of research. The Institute intends to continue to meet the challenges of research on official language minorities. In particular, the Institute wants to partner with those authorities best able to identify the special challenges faced by each official language minority, both Anglophone communities in Québec and minority Canadian Francophones. The Institute wants to play a greater role in disseminating, both within its network and to the general public, information on research opportunities and projects in fields related to its mission. These efforts to increase the visibility of the Institute's work will increase in the coming year in order to reflect the Institute's growing place on the playing field of research on official language minorities.

I would like to thank the Board of Directors for its interest and its vision, the program committee for its valuable advice and support, the entire Institute team for its commitment and its conscientious work and, finally, our collaborators, without whom the CIRLM could not carry out its mission.

■ THE MISSION OF THE INSTITUTE

The Canadian Institute for Research on Linguistic Minorities is a centre of excellence whose role is to lead, bring together and partner with research centres, researchers, community agencies and government bodies in order to promote a greater knowledge of the status of Canada's official language minorities and a better understanding of the priority issues that concern them. To this end, it is committed to carrying out, in cooperation with its partners, relevant research work that can support the various stakeholders of official language minorities and the public policy-makers in language matters.

■ BOARD OF DIRECTORS

The Board of Directors is made up of representatives of various Canadian institutions having an interest in the stated fields of research.

5.4 Training research assistants

CIRLM contributes to training students in research. The Institute hired a total of 15 students in 2004-2005 to work on its projects.

2004-2005 ACTIVITIES

6.1 Research activities

The CIRLM took on twenty-four research projects, several in partnership with other research centres and community groups.

Six research projects on early childhood, youth and the family, community vitality and governance were completed.

Eighteen other projects involving university and community partners are currently under way in the following areas: identity; early childhood, youth and the family; community vitality; governance; health.

Seven other proposals were submitted but not accepted.

6.3.3 Web site

The CIRLM's Web site is still evolving. Changes are aimed at improving the presentation of information and increasing the information available on the Web site. Several publications are now available on the CIRLM's Web site. It now has a search engine to find references to the publications in the directory. This search engine will be improved, expanding possibilities for searching the Web site. Work is under way to introduce those researchers associated with the CIRLM and to disseminate publications (works, theses and briefs) on linguistic minorities. Little by little, these improvements should make the Web site a reference tool for all those who are interested in official language minorities in Canada. The Web site is also linked to a newsletter that regularly presents information on the CIRLM's activities.

6.3.4 Media

Some of the CIRLM's work and projects drew media attention. Rodrigue Landry's study, "Libérer le potentiel caché de l'exogamie", led to several interviews published in newspapers and broadcast on radio and television in several provinces. Rodrigue Landry appeared on Marie-France Bazzo's program, Indicatif présent, to discuss the fate of Francophone minorities outside Québec. Daniel Bourgeois' work also garnered media attention. His study "Vers la pleine gestion francophone en milieu minoritaire", gave rise to several media reports. His two other research projects funded by the SSHRC were publicized in the media. He also
